

The Hound of the Baskervilles

This is the chilling story that has kept people from walking out on the fields and moors for decades. Arthur Conan Doyle was a practicing physician. He studied under Joseph Bell, a man whose powers of observation and logic formed the character of Sherlock Holmes. Those of us who love detective novels keep going back to the master. Doyle died in 1930. His tales continue to thrill us almost a century after they were written. Please join me in the chilling tale of that vicious dog and the master sleuth! Tom Thomas, Editor
